“ He taught me boolean algebra before I even knew what it was. Had me remove all the relays in a machine tool and clean the contacts and had me tell him what would happen when one relay was turned on.

“ I worked with Darrell, but he was more than a machinist. He was an Electrical/Electronic engineer. Built his own computers and built Central Machine and Tool's first operating computer for the accounting department. He was my inspiration to get my degree in Electronics, I considered him a genius. He took me on because I was former Navy as well. He taught me a lot in the electronic business, and because of him, I was able to graduate with honors.
